the children of immigrants continue a journey begun by their parents born or raised in the united states this second generation now stands over 20 million strong in this insightful new book immigration scholars renee luthra thomas soehl and roger waldinger provide a fresh understanding the making of the second generation bringing both their origins and destinations into view using surveys of second generation immigrant adults in new york and los angeles origins and destinations explains why second generation experiences differ across national origin groups and why immigrant offspring with the same national background often follow different trajectories inter group disparities stem from contexts of both emigration and immigration origin countries differ in value orientations immigrant parents transmit lessons learned in varying contexts of emigration to children raised in the u s a system of migration control sifts immigrants by legal status generating a context of immigration that favors some groups over others both contexts matter schooling is higher among immigrant children from more secular societies south korea than among those from more religious countries the philippines when immigrant groups enter the u s migration system through a welcoming door as opposed to one that makes authorized status difficult to achieve education propels immigrant children to better jobs diversity is also evident among immigrant offspring whose parents stem from the same place immigrant children grow up with homeland connections which can both hurt and harm immigrant offspring get less schooling when a parent lives abroad but more schooling if parents in the u s send money to relatives living abroad though all immigrants enter the u s as non citizens some instantly enjoy legal status while others spend years in the shadows children born abroad but raised in the u s are all everyday americans but only some have become de jure americans a difference yielding across the board positive effects even among those who started out in the same country disentangling the sources of diversity among today s population of immigrant offspring origins and destinations provides a compelling new framework for understanding the second generation that is transforming america this open access book draws on award winning cross generational research comparing the complex and life changing processes of settlement among albanian migrants and their adolescent children in three european cities london uk thessaloniki greece and florence italy building on key concepts from the social sciences and migration studies such as identity integration and transnationalism the author links these with emerging theoretical notions such as mobility translocality and cosmopolitanism ethnic identities transnational ties and integration pathways of the youngsters and adults are compared focusing on intergenerational transmission in particular and recognizing mobility as an inherent characteristic of contemporary lives departing from the traditional focus on the adult children of settled migrants and the main immigration countries of continental north western europe this study centres on southern europe and great britain and a very recently settled immigrant group the result is an illuminating early look at a second generation in the making indeed the findings provide ample grounds for pragmatic and forward looking policy to enable these migrant origin youngsters and others like them to more fully attain their potential the book ends with a call to reassess the term second generation as it is currently used in policy and scholarly works children of migrants seldom see themselves as a particular and homogeneous group with ethnicity as an intrinsic identifying quality more importantly they make use of all the limited resources at their disposal and view their integration processes through broader geographies showing sometimes a cosmopolitan orientation but also using localized reference points such as the school city or urban neighbourhood

the children of immigrants account for the fastest growing segment of the u s population under eighteen years old one out of every five children in the united states will this generation of immigrant children follow the path of earlier waves of immigrants and gradually assimilate into mainstream american life or does the global nature of the contemporary world mean that the trajectory of today s immigrants will be fundamentally different rather than severing their ties to their home countries many immigrants today sustain economic political and religious ties to their homelands even as they work vote and pray in the countries that receive them the changing face of home is the first book to examine the extent to which the children of immigrants engage in such transnational practices because most second generation immigrants are still young there is much debate among immigration scholars about the extent to which these children will engage in transnational practices in the future while the contributors to this volume find some evidence of transnationalism among the children of immigrants they disagree over whether these activities will have any long term effects part i of the volume explores how the practice and consequences of transnationalism vary among different groups contributors philip kasinitz mary waters and john mollenkopf use findings from their large study of immigrant communities in new york city to show how both distance and politics play important roles in determining levels of transnational activity for example many latin american and caribbean immigrants are circular migrants spending much time in both their home countries and the united states while russian jews and chinese immigrants have far less contact of any kind with their homelands in part ii the contributors comment on these findings offering suggestions for reconceptualizing the issue and bridging analytical differences in her chapter nancy foner makes valuable comparisons with past waves of immigrants as a way of understanding the conditions that may foster or mitigate transnationalism among today s immigrants the final set of chapters examines how home and host country value systems shape how second generation immigrants construct their identities and the economic social and political communities to which they ultimately express allegiance the changing face of home presents an important first round of research and dialogue on the activities and identities of the second generation vis a vis their ancestral homelands and raises important questions for future research
