Text-Book of Medical Jurisprudence and Toxicology 1889 excerpt from medical jurisprudence forensic medicine and toxicology vol 3 the acuteness of vision of an eye witness may have an important bearing upon the credibility of his testimony it may have an important bearing on those cases of alleged direct or indirect injury to the visual apparatus in which the simulating plaintiff is actuated by revengeful motives or by a dishonest desire for pecuniary remuneration for his alleged hurt it must be taken into consideration likewise in those cases of actual injury direct or indirect to the visual apparatus in which justice would naturally side with the injured party to the end that the degree of his incapacity may be correctly determined the visual apparatus comprises the eyeball together with its extrinsic muscles the optic nerves the chiasm the optic tracts and the centres of visual perception in the brain acuteness of vision depends upon the integrity of these structures the eyeball is really a living camera upon its retina is projected an instantaneous and transient photograph of the objects seen by virtue of the transmission of such impressions upon the retina to the centres of vision in the occipital lobes by the optic nerves the chiasm the optic tracts and the prolongations of the optic tracts the retinal image of the object under observation is perceived if the retinal images be true and if impressions of them be properly transmitted to a normal visual centre the perceptions of the object will be correct so far as concerns the visual apparatus it often happens however that the retinal images are not clear and distinct under certain conditions they do not represent the thing as it is the reason for this must often be sought in the state of the refraction of the eye

A Text-Book of Medical Jurisprudence and Toxicology 2013-10-22 excerpt from medical jurisprudence vol 2 forensic medicine and toxicology first is the stain a blood stain or does it contain blood second if a blood stain does the blood come from a bird fish reptile or from a mammal third if the blood is mammalian blood did it come from any given species of mammal this question usually assumes the form of whether the stain is a human blood stain or that of some animal in some cases the data given are such that the question only arises as between human blood and that of some specified animal it is some times alleged for instance that the blood is that of a chicken fish pig horse ox or sheep in which case the expert is only called upon to decide between a stain made by human blood and that of the animal mentioned in other cases however no data are given and the expert must state whether his examination has given results which show that the blood in the stain examined is or is not consistent with its having originated from a human being the methods employed for the identification of blood stains are first chemical second optical third microscopical examination for the identification of the blood corpuscles or a combination of all of these methods of investigation but before considering these in detail it is necessary to take up some of the physical and other properties of the blood which may have a very important bearing in certain medico legal cases about the publisher forgotten books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books find more at forgottenbooks.com this book is a reproduction of an important historical work forgotten books uses state of the art technology to digitally reconstruct the work preserving the original format whilst repairing imperfections present in the aged copy in rare cases an imperfection in the original such as a blemish or missing page may be replicated in our edition we do however repair the vast majority of imperfections successfully any imperfections that remain are intentionally left to preserve the state of such historical works
