this is the first substantial book written from first hand experience by a british planning practitioner about what the planning process is actually like in a major british city the city in this case is manchester for which authority ted kitchen worked from 1979 to 1996 the book looks at how the elements in the making of planning decisions interact its primary purpose is to illuminate the complex workings of the planning process in the real world as well as considering the basic tools of development plan making and development control used by the planning process the author looks at the actors planning staff elected members and the other main groups of customers of the planning service and at the major fields of activity with which the planning process engages these include the need to improve the economic base of the city the problems of planning in the inner city transportation issues and attempts to move towards more sustainable urban policies and practices much of this material is controversial and most of it is presented in case study format the author deals fully with matters that show the interactions between the professional work of the planning staff and the operation of the political process the book shows how processes of urban regeneration were tackled during a period when the city of manchester was experiencing a renaissance in many elements of its economic life many of these processes such as the city s bids for the 1996 and 2000 olympic games were high profile activities which strengthened the city s image in the wider world at the same time the living circumstances of many people worsened particularly in the inner city policy development struggled with this tension as well as with others such as the challenge to the dominant economic regeneration model posed by the emerging issue of urban sustainability the author turns an insider s eye on the processes of policymaking at work in this situation and the planning service is shown grappling with a difficult policy agenda and a difficult political situation in a period of diminishing resources theory and practice in city planning have never been known for their compatibility the planner dealing with stresses such as the personalities at work in a board meeting and coping with the realities of fund raising political realities and the like can find little guidance in the theory of the trade the issues of poverty groups whether rural or urban the provision of services and the packaging of them are seemingly insuperable the sheer frustration in the inability to deliver which so many planners feel can result in considerable impatience and a questioning of the relevance of theory the editors argue that this state of affairs though understandable is unacceptable while short range meliorism without sense of perspective may be good for the practitioner's individual psyche the cost may be borne by the long run best interests of the groups to be served the risks of a lack of perspective and the experiences generated by this phenomenon are too serious in their implications to permit the process to continue in this new age of anxiety it is essential for both planners and theorists to understand their roles as well as provide guidance in shaping them burchell and sternlieb have thus gathered here a variety of individuals all of whom in their separate and distinct fashions are seasoned both in practice and in theory the book is divided into five sections physical planning in change social planning in change public policy planning in change economic planning in change and a final section detailing the roles of planners and who they are these shared puzzlements and insights will prove useful to all practitioners and theorists in the planning field
