excerpt from introduction to business finance for some years now increasing interest has been evidenced among both academicians and practitioners in a new approach to the teaching of business finance both formal and informal conferences have been held on the subject at the annual meetings of the american finance association various collegiate schools of business administration have experimented with new materials and courses and quite a few finance texts introducing somewhat different approaches have appeared since the conclusion of the second world war the essence of the feeling among those who have expressed themselves in favor of a change from the traditional corporation finance course is that this approach is neither suited to the experience of the typical undergraduate student nor consistent with the objectives of collegiate education in business the subject matter tends to be too sophisticated in nature by being too concerned with the financing of large corporations also by concentrating on the institutions and instruments of corporate finance the standard texts and courses have been more introductory to the general subject of investments than to business finance since finance is one of the major administrative functions in business along with production and marketing it would seem reasonable to teach it from the administrative standpoint and since the beginning course in any subject should be generic in nature rather than specific the subject matter should not be concerned with only one type of business organization e g the corporation the focal point should be that of financial management the principles institutions and instruments of which might be transferred to any type of business enterprise and applied to any situation finally such an approach is more consistent with that of other basic business courses and therefore is more easily comprehended by the student about the publisher forgotten books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books find more at forgottenbooks.com this book is a reproduction of an important historical work forgotten books uses state of the art technology to digitally reconstruct the work preserving the original format whilst repairing imperfections present in the aged copy in rare cases an imperfection in the original such as a blemish or missing page may be replicated in our edition we do however repair the vast majority of imperfections successfully any imperfections that remain are intentionally left to preserve the state of such historical works
