during a single production season also reveal important dynamics in MSP's decision making. Negative revenue prospects at particular period can further hurt revenue prospects in subsequent periods which is consistent with the hypotheses that agents like MSP who had incurred significant sunk cost in machines can engage in more desperate and thus potentially suboptimal business practice to recover the sunk cost. This may result in a vicious cycle of declining revenues in the future in the face of shocks like COVID-19. Overall evidence suggests that policies to minimize movement restrictions, various financial support and mitigate any pessimism at the beginning of production season are all important to make sure MSP and MER continue to function effectively during the COVID-19 pandemic that persists in 2021.
