neuroscience has made astounding progress in the understanding of the brain what should we make of its claims to go beyond the brain and explain consciousness behaviour and culture where should we draw the line in this brilliant critique raymond tallis dismantles neuromania arising out of the idea that we are reducible to our brains and darwinitis according to which since the brain is an evolved organ we are entirely explicable within an evolutionary framework with precision and acuity he argues that the belief that human beings can be understood in biological terms is a serious obstacle to clear thinking about what we are and what we might become neuromania and darwinitis deny human uniqueness minimise the differences between us and our nearest animal kin and offer a grotesquely simplified account of humanity we are argues tallis infinitely more interesting and complex than we appear in the mirror of biology combative fearless and thought provoking aping mankind is an important book and one that scientists cultural commentators and policy makers cannot ignore this routledge classics edition includes a new preface by the author taking inspiration from classic authors from Jane Austen to Thomas Hardy, Williams shines a light on our society's changing views of the rural and industrial landscapes in which we work and live. Our collective notion of the city and country is irresistibly powerful: the city as the seat of enlightenment, sophistication, power, and greed is in profound contrast with an innocent, peaceful, backward countryside. Examining literature since the sixteenth century, Williams traces the development of our conceptions of these two traditional poles of life. His groundbreaking study casts the country and city as central symbols for the social and economic changes associated with capitalist development. With an introduction by Tristram Hunt.

social scientists study food in many different ways historians have most often studied the history of specific foods anthropologists have emphasized the role of food in religious rituals and group identities sociologists have looked primarily at food as an indicator of social class and a factor in social ties and nutritionists have focused on changing patterns of consumption and applied medical knowledge to study the effects of diet on public health other scholars have studied the economic and political connections surrounding commerce in food here these perspectives are brought together in a single volume
