the cancer of the pancreas screening study caps is a research program developed to evaluate the effectiveness of early detection screening in high risk individuals of pancreatic cancer and to progress the discovery of new biomarkers to improve early detection the cancer of the pancreas screening 5 caps5 study aim 1 to evaluate pancreatic fluid mutations and circulating pancreatic epithelial cells as accurate markers of neoplasia by comparing their prevalence in cases with sporadic pancreatic neoplasia to healthy and disease controls the pancreas screening caps trials we have screened 500 individuals at increased risk of developing pancreatic cancer based on family history or gene mutation status we now propose a new multi center caps study that will build on the successful completion of the single center hopkins caps1 and caps 2 studies the goal of this study was to describe the outcomes to date of the multicenter cancer of pancreas screening 5 caps5 study which opened in 2014 in particular with a focus on the proceedings the british academy
