farming was the basis of the wealth that made england worth invading twice in the eleventh century while trade and manufacturing were insignificant by modern standards in anglo saxon farms and farming the authors employ a wide range of evidence to investigate how anglo saxon farmers produced the food and other agricultural products that sustained english economy society and culture before the norman conquest the first part of the volume draws on written and pictorial sources archaeology place names and the history of the english language to discover what crops and livestock people raised and what tools and techniques were used to produce them in part two using a series of landscape studies place names maps and the landscape itself the authors explore how these techniques might have been combined into working agricultural regimes in different parts of the country a picture emerges of an agriculture that changed from an essentially prehistoric state in the sub roman period to what was recognisably the beginning of a tradition that only ended with the second world war anglo saxon farming was not only sustainable but infinitely adaptable to different soils and geology and to a climate changing as unpredictably as it is today

v gordon childe was the first scholar to attempt a broad and sustained socioeconomic analysis of the archaeology of the ancient world in terms that today could be called explanatory to most he was remembered only as a diligent synthesizer whose whole interpretation collapsed when its chronology was demolished there was little recognition of his insistence that the emergence of craft specialists and their very variable roles in the relations of production were crucial to an understanding of social evolution the interrelationship between sociopolitical complexity and craft production is a critical one so critical that one might ask just how complex would any society have become without craft specialization this volume derives from the papers presented at a symposium at the american anthropological association meetings on the centenary of childe s birth contributors to the volume include david w anthony philip j arnold iii benet bronson robert chapman john e clark cathy l costin pam j crabtree philip l kohl d blair gibson antonio gilman vincent c piggott jeremy a sabloff gil j stein ruth tringham anne p underhill bernard wailes peter s wells joyce c white rita p wright and richard l zettler symposium series volume vi university museum monograph 93

this volume explores the complex relations of texts and their contextualising elements drawing particularly on the notions of paratext metadiscourse and framing it aims at developing a more comprehensive historical understanding of these phenomena covering a wide time span from old english to the 20th century in a range of historical genres and contexts of text production mediation and consumption however more fundamentally it also seeks to expand our conception of text and the communicative spaces surrounding them and probe the explanatory potential of the concepts under investigation though essentially rooted in historical linguistics and philology the twelve contributions of this volume are also open to insights from other disciplines such as medieval manuscript studies and bibliography but also information studies marketing studies and even digital electronics and thus tackle opportunities and challenges in researching the dynamics of text and framing phenomena in a historical perspective crafting communities explores the interface between craft communication networks and urbanization in viking age northern europe viking period towns were the hubs of cross cultural communication of their age and innovations in specialized crafts provide archaeologists with some of the best evidence for studying this communication the integrated results presented in these papers have been made possible through the sustained collaboration of a group of experts with complementary insights into individual crafts results emerge from recent scholarly advances in the study of artifacts and production first the application of new analytical techniques in artifact studies e.g. metallographic, isotopic and biomolecular techniques and second the shifted interpretative focus of medieval artifact studies from a concern with object function to considerations of processes of production and of the social agency of technology. Furthermore, the introduction of social network theory and actor network theory has redirected attention toward the process of communication and highlighted the significance of material culture in the learning and transmission of cultural knowledge including technology. The volume brings together leading UK and Scandinavian archaeological specialists to explore crafted products and workshop assemblages from these towns in order to clarify how such long range communication worked in pre-modern northern Europe. Contributors assess the implications for our understanding of early towns and the long term societal change catalysed by them including the initial steps towards commercial economies. Results are analyzed in relation to social network theory, social and economic history and models of communication setting an agenda for further research. Crafting Communities provides a landmark statement on our knowledge of Viking Age craft and communication.

Craft Specialization and Social Evolution

In the present volume the two essays that frame the book provide exciting insight into the mental world of the Anglo-Saxons by showing on the one hand how they understood the processes of reading and assimilating knowledge and on the other how they conceived of time and the passage of the seasons in the field of art history. Two essays treat two of the best known Anglo-Saxon manuscripts: the lavish 'Symbol' pages in the Book of Durrow are shown to reflect a programmatic exposition of the meaning of Easter and a posthumous essay by a distinguished art historian shows how the Anglo-Saxon illustrations added to the Galba Psalter are best to be understood in the context of the programme of learning instituted by King Alfred. The usual comprehensive bibliography of the previous year's publications in all branches of Anglo-Saxon studies rounds off the book. the anglo saxon period was crucial to the development of the english landscape but is rarely studied the essays here provide radical new interpretations of its development traditional opinion has perceived the anglo saxons as creating an entirely new landscape from scratch in the fifth and sixth centuries and cutting down woodland and bringing with them the practice of open field agriculture and establishing villages whilst recent scholarship has proved this simplistic picture wanting it has also raised many questions about the nature of landscape development at the time the changing nature of systems of land management and strategies for settlement the papers here seek to shed new light on these complex issues taking a variety of different approaches and with topics ranging from the impact of coppicing to medieval field systems from the representation of the landscape in manuscripts to cereal production and the type of bread the population preferred they offer striking new approaches to the central issues of landscape change across the seven centuries of anglo saxon england a period surely foundational to the rural landscape of today nicholas j higham is professor of early medieval and landscape history at the university of manchester martin j ryan lectures in medieval history at the university of manchester contributors nicholas j higham christopher grocock stephen rippon stuart brookes carenza lewis susan oosthuizen tom williamson catherine karkov david hill debby banham richard hoggett peter murphy

the early anglo saxon period is characterized archaeologically by the regular deposition of artefacts in human graves in england the scope for dating these objects and graves has long been studied but it has typically proved easier to identify and enumerate the chronological problems of the material than to solve them prior to the work of the project reported on here therefore there was no comprehensive chronological framework for early anglo saxon archaeology and the level of detail and precision in dates that could be suggested was low the evidence has now been studied afresh using a co ordinated suite of dating techniques both traditional and new a review and revision of artefact typology seriation of grave assemblages using correspondence analysis high precision radiocarbon dating of selected bone samples and bayesian modelling using the results of all of these these were focussed primarily on the later part of the early anglo saxon period starting in the 6th century this research has produced a new chronological framework consisting of sequences of phases that are separate for male and female burials but nevertheless mutually consistent and coordinated these will allow archaeologists to assign grave assemblages and a wide range of individual artefact types to defined phases that are associated with calendrical date ranges whose limits are expressed to a specific degree of probability important unresolved issues include a precise adjustment for dietary effects on radiocarbon dates from human skeletal material nonetheless the results of this project suggest the cessation of regular burial with grave goods in anglo saxon england two decades or even more before the end of the seventh century that creates a limited but important discrepancy with the current numismatic chronology of early english sceattas the wider implications of the results for key topics in anglo saxon archaeology and social economic and religious history are discussed to conclude the report
