Rethinking Life and Death 1996-04-15 a powerfully written work by peter singer princeton university author of animal liberation 1975 in this wide ranging and accessible book singer offers a brief survey of some of the most vital historical scientific philosophical and even religious aspects of animal liberation making connections between sexism racism homophobia and speciesism he shows why nonhuman animals are the last group of sentient beings to gain rights as well as how the movement to extend basic rights to them something increasing with each generation is emerging as the historical and moral end goal humanity has been moving toward throughout its evolution what's partly aided this evolution are scientific discoveries unveiling the biological and moral relatedness of humans and nonhuman animals if such facts begin to inform our ethics then our awareness of these primal bonds such as suffering empathy sorrow and joy will enable humanity to move away from its role as oppressor and into one of cohabitant and caretaker of the planet and other beings the devastating issues related to our current exploitation of other species human health epidemics environmental catastrophes and the unnecessary brutality against other sentient life will finally be confronted in earnest and it will become apparent that the embrace of animal liberation is in fact the beginning of true human liberation

Ethics in the Real World 2017-09-05 alasdair cochrane provides an entirely new theory of animal rights grounded in their interests as sentient beings he applies this theory to a whole range of different and under explored policy areas such as genetic engineering pet keeping indigenous hunting and religious slaughter in contrast to other proponents of animal rights cochrane claims that the possession of rights by animals does not mean animals must never be owned or used by human beings he claims that because most sentient animals are not autonomous agents they have no intrinsic interest in liberty as such his
