a major problem in health economics is how to give a value to changes in health this is the first book to examine all the money measures that are used in such evaluations changes in health might be caused by medical treatments by public safety programmes and by anti pollution programmes and the cost benefit analysis of such programmes involves the use of money measures the author defines the properties of these money measures examining them in both a certain and a risky world he evaluates available empirical approaches for the assessment of the value of health changes and considers measures such as quality adjusted life years qalys and healthy years equivalents hys this book raises the important question of whether we are willing to pay the costs for our health care system it will

public health spending is low in emerging and developing economies relative to advanced economies and health outputs and outcomes need to be substantially improved simply increasing public expenditure in the health sector however may not significantly affect health outcomes if the efficiency of this spending is low this paper quantifies the inefficiency of public health expenditure and the associated potential gains for emerging and developing economies using a stochastic frontier model that controls for the socioeconomic determinants of health and provides country specific estimates the results suggest that african economies have the lowest efficiency at current spending levels they could boost life expectancy up to about five years if they followed best practices most economic evaluations of health care programmes at the moment are cost effectiveness and cost utility analyses the problem with these methods is that their theoretical foundations are unclear this has led to confusion about how to define the costs and health effects and how to interpret the results of these studies in the environmental and traffic safety fields it is instead common to carry out traditional cost bene fit analyses of health improving programmes this striking difference in how health programmes are assessed in different fields was the original motivation for writing this book the aim of the book is to try and provide a coherent framework within cost bene fit analysis and welfare economics for the different methods of economic evaluation in the health care field the book is written in an easily accessible manner and several examples of applications of the different methods are provided it is my hope that it will be useful both for teaching purposes and as a guide for practitioners in the field glenn c blomquist john d graham rich o conor and four anonymous referees provided helpful comments on previous versions of the manuscript i would also like to express my gratitude to the following persons for helping me to prepare the manuscript carl magnus berglund carin blanksvard ann brown and ziad obeid sought also to do something far more ambitious to confront the intellectual issues that are attached to the use of the word evaluation in medicine and health services to this end a carefully selected group of experts in medicine epidemiology and health economics was invited to present papers they were selected for their reputations either as conceptualizers or as empirical evaluators or the rarest breed of expert as both the context was to be empirical three procedures were selected that had been subject to evaluation but that posed rather different types of problem the first was the treatment of renal failure by dialysis of various kinds this has a relatively long history of evaluation with a large literature and particularly raises broad policy issues within the health services of western societies as to the size of programmes to be provided the type location and mix of treatments the selection of patients to receive treatment and the measurement of the success of various strategies the second was the treatment of duodenal ulcer by a new species of drug the histamine H<sub>2</sub> receptor antagonists specifically cimetidine
