the boy had only smelled it twice in his life once before in his own cabin and once when he was walking past the big house down the road the sausage and ham bone smells filled up the cabin and leaked out through the cracks in the floor and around the door they excited sounder and now he was scratching at the door sounder 1969 there was nothing else to do now and then a cloud would cross the sun that had finally burned its way out of the gray the boy watched the cloud shadows roll over the fields and pass over the cabin they darkened the window as they passed he carried in wood for the night before the sun began to weaken
