this research topic addresses research in genomics and biotechnology to improve the growth and quality of forest trees for wood pulp biorefineries and carbon capture forests are the world s greatest repository of terrestrial biomass and biodiversity forests serve critical ecological services supporting the preservation of fauna and flora and water resources planted forests also offer a renewable source of timber for pulp and paper production and the biorefinery despite their fundamental role for society thousands of hectares of forests are lost annually due to deforestation pests pathogens and urban development as a consequence there is an increasing need to develop trees that are more productive under lower inputs while understanding how they adapt to the environment and respond to biotic and abiotic stress forest genomics and biotechnology disciplines that study the genetic composition of trees and the methods required to modify them began over a quarter of a century ago with the development of the first genetic maps and establishment of early methods of genetic transformation since then genomics and biotechnology have impacted all research areas of forestry genome analyses of tree populations have uncovered genes involved in adaptation and response to biotic and abiotic stress genes that regulate growth and development have been identified and in many cases their mechanisms of action have been described genetic transformation is now widely used to understand the roles of genes and to develop germplasm that is more suitable for commercial tree plantations however in contrast to many annual crops that have benefited from centuries of domestication and extensive genomic and biotechnology research in forestry the field is still in its infancy thus tremendous opportunities remain unexplored this research topic aims to briefly summarize recent findings to discuss long term goals and to think ahead about future developments and how this can be applied to improve growth and quality of forest trees
