constant migration is a worldwide phenomenon that creates sharp divisions between those who accept the need for migrants and welcome the contributions they make and those who oppose them on xenophobic grounds guy arnold provides a comprehensive survey of the consequences of migration arnold studies both the massive internal migrations in china and india that drive economic development and the influx of cheap labor into the advanced economies of the usa and eu he shows that migrants are essential to advanced countries filling skills gaps and to bolstering aging and static populations he argues that the constant flow of people in all directions should be welcomed as a positive assault upon outdated narrow nationalism packed with statistics that support the argument that migration is a force for positive change arnold s analysis will be an excellent resource for journalists policy makers and students of sociology human geography and anthropology beginning in the 1970s survey data indicated that the average migrant was a young unmarried man who was poor undereducated and in search of better employment opportunities this is the general view that most americans still hold of immigrants from mexico on the move argues that not only does this view of mexican migrants reinforce the stereotype of their undesirability but it also fails to capture the true diversity of migrants from mexico and their evolving migration patterns over time using survey data from over 145 000 mexicans and in depth interviews with nearly 140 mexicans filiz garip reveals a more accurate picture of mexico u s migration in the last fifty years there have been four primary waves a male dominated migration from rural areas in the 1960s and 70s a second migration of young men from socioeconomically more well off families during the 1980s a migration of women joining spouses already in the united states in the late 1980s and 90s and a generation of more educated urban migrants in the late 1990s and early 2000s for each of these four stages garip examines the changing variety of reasons for why people migrate and migrants perceptions of their opportunities in mexico and the united states looking at mexico u s migration during the last half century on the move uncovers the vast mechanisms underlying the flow of people moving between nations interest to the global community with the ending of the cold war many of the physical and political barriers to migration have fallen and as international economic disparities have widened the incentive for movement has grown in many countries new legislative and administrative restrictions have been imposed on the immigration of economic migrants and refugees population migration and the changing world order is a collection of 16 papers built around the theme of how global migration systems have been affected by recent geopolitical and geoeconomic changes it contains general introductory and concluding overviews and three sections that focus on movements within the developed world from the third world to the developed world and within the third world these case study chapters draw on original research from a wide range of geographical areas including europe asia australia africa and north america and deal thematically with specific migrant categories both in terms of origin and destination workers and families skilled and unskilled refugees and school leavers rich and poor overall this collection offers a global perspective by geographers on a widespread phenomenon of growing concern and importance it presents international migration in the 1990s not as a threat to economic and political stability but rather as an opportunity for migrants and states to react positively to the new and still changing world order climate change and environmental degradation on the movement of people this book takes a hard look at the existing evidence available to policymakers in different regions of the world how much do we really know about the impact of environmental change on migration how will different regions of the world be affected in the future is there evidence to show that migration can help countries adapt to environmental change what types of research have been conducted how reliable is the evidence these are some of the questions considered in this book which presents for the first time a synthesis of relevant research findings for each major region of the world written by regional experts the book provides a comprehensive overview of the key findings of existing studies on the linkages between environmental change and the movement of people more and more reports on migration and the environment are being published but the information is often scattered between countries and within regions and it is not always clear how much of this information is based on solid research this book brings this evidence together for the first time highlighting innovative studies and research gaps in doing this the book seeks to help decision makers draw lessons from existing studies and to identify priorities for further research environmental change land grabbing and migration drawing on research conducted in senegal and cambodia while the impacts of environmental change on migration and of environmental discourses on land grabs have received increased attention the role of both environmental and migration narratives in shaping migration by modifying access to natural resources has remained under explored using a variegated geopolitical ecology framework and a comparative global ethnographic approach this book analyses the power of mainstream adaptation and security frameworks and how they impact the lives of marginalised and vulnerable communities in senegal and cambodia findings across the cases show how environmental and migration narratives linked to adaptation and security discourses have been deployed advertently or inadvertently to justify land capture leading to interventions that often increase rather than alleviate the very pressures that they intend to address the interrelations between these issues are inherent to the tensions that exist in different contexts and at different times between capital accumulation and political legitimation the findings of the book point to the urgency for researchers and policymakers to address the structural causes and not the symptoms of both environmental destruction and forced migration it shows how acting upon environmental change land grabs and migration in isolated or binary manners can increase rather than alleviate pressures on those most socio environmentally vulnerable this book will be of interest to students scholars and practitioners working on the topics of land and resource grabbing and environmental change and migration the book will also be of interest to those analysing political ecology transitions in africa and asia as well as to those interested in novel theoretical and methodological frameworks while migration and population settlement have always been an important feature of political life throughout the world the dramatic changes in the pace direction and complexity of contemporary migration flows are undoubtedly unique despite the economic benefits often associated with global regional and internal migration the arrival of large numbers of migrants can exacerbate tensions and give rise to violent clashes between local populations and recent arrivals this volume takes stock of these trends by canvassing the globe to generate new conceptual empirical and theoretical contributions the analyses ultimately reveal the critical role of the state as both an actor and arena in the migration conflict nexus

Disentangling Migration and Climate Change

climate change and migration are major concerns in the mena region yet the empirical evidence on the impact of climate change and extreme weather events on migration remains limited information is broadly lacking on how households in vulnerable areas perceive changes in the climate how they are affected by extreme weather events whether they benefit from community and government programs to help them cope with and adapt to a changing climate and how these conditions influence the decision of household members to migrate either temporarily or permanently this introductory chapter summarizes briefly the main results of the study which relied on existing data as well as focus groups and new household surveys collected in 2011 in algeria egypt morocco syria and yemen the results suggest that households do perceive important changes in the climate and that many households are being affected by extreme weather events resulting in losses in income crops and livestock the coping and adaptation strategies used by households to deal with weather shocks are diverse but also limited with most households not able to recover from the negative impact of weather shocks the ability of community level responses and government programs to support households is also very limited finally while climate change is not today the main driver of migration flows it does appear to contribute substantially to these flows so that worsening climatic conditions are likely to exacerbate future migration flows this open access book studies the migration aspirations and trajectories of people living in two regions in morocco that are highly affected by environmental change or emigration namely tangier and tinghir as well as the migration trajectories of immigrants coming from these regions currently living in belgium this book departs from the development of a new theoretical framework on the relationship between environmental changes and migration that can be applied to the moroccan case qualitative research conducted in both countries demonstrate how the interplay between migration and environmental factors is not as straightforward as it seems due to its wider social political economic demographic and environmental context findings show how existing cultures of migration remittances views on nature and discourses on climate change create distinct abilities capacities and aspirations to migrate due to environmental changes the results illustrate how migration and environmental factors evolve gradually and mutually influence each other in doing so this book offers new insights in the ways migration can be seen as an adaptation strategy to deal with environmental change in morocco gradual and sudden environmental changes are resulting in substantial human movement and displacement and the scale of such flows both internal and cross border is expected to rise with unprecedented impacts on lives and livelihoods despite the potential challenge there has been a lack of strategic thinking about this policy area partly due to a lack of data and empirical research on this topic adequately planning for and managing environmentallyinduced migration will be critical for human security the papers in this volume were first presented at the research workshop on migration and the environment developing a global research agenda held in munich germany in april 2008 one of the key objectives on the munich workshop was to address the need for more sound empirical research and identify priority areas of research for policy makers in the field of migration and the environment
