in this wide ranging and field changing work steven collins argues that the study of theravada buddhism needs to be separated from the rather dated and stagnant field of textual history and approached both civilizationaly and as a practice of the self by civilizationaly he means that instead of seeing buddhism as a set of original teachings of the so called historical buddha from the 5th century bc to the present it should rather be viewed as an effort by many teachers and visionaries over time to make sense of what it means to lead a worthy life the purveyors of buddhist philosophy did not consider themselves to be preservers of an archaic body of rules and ethical guidelines they were designing a dynamic way of living and confronting human problems in a timeless way using approaches to the very idea of the self promoted by Foucault and Hadot. He compares Theravada Buddhist ways of understanding and practicing the self to modernist and postmodernist ideas about philosophy as a way of life rather than applying positivist and historicist approaches. Buddhism should be assessed philosophically, literarily, and ethically using its own vocabulary and rhetorical tools treated in this manner. Buddhist notions of the self can be applied to contemporary ideas of self care and the promotion of human flourishing. The book covers topics such as spiritual practice, ultimate versus provisional truth, systematic versus narrative thinking, meditation versus virtue and history versus philosophy. It is a bold and complex way of understanding the impact that Buddhist ways of knowing can have in the world today, bringing them into conversation with modern psychology, literary studies, ethics, gender, and sexuality studies, and philosophy.

Life's That Way

In the ancient world, philosophy was understood to be a practical guide for living or even itself a way of life. This volume of essays brings historical views about philosophy as a way of life coupled with their modern equivalents more prevalently into the domain of the contemporary scholarly world. It illustrates how the articulation of philosophy as a way of life and its pedagogical implementation advances the love of wisdom. Questions of how we might convey the love of wisdom as not only a body of dogmatic principles and axiomatic truths but also a lived exercise that can be practiced are offered. A collection of essays on an emerging field of philosophical research, essential reading for academics, researchers, and scholars of philosophy, moral philosophy, and pedagogy, also for business and professional people who have an interest in expanding their horizons.
