stephen hanson traces the influence of the marxist conception of time in soviet politics from lenin to gorbachev he argues that the history of marxism and leninism reveals an unsuccessful revolutionary effort to reorder the human relationship with time and that this reorganization had a direct impact on the design of the central political socioeconomic and cultural institutions of the soviet union from 1917 to 1991 according to hanson westerners tend to envision time as both rational and inexorable in a system in which time is money the clock dominates workers marx however believed that communist workers would be freed of the artificial distinction between leisure time and work time as a result they would be able to surpass capitalist production levels and ultimately control time itself hanson reveals the distinctive imprint of this philosophy on the formation and development of soviet institutions arguing that the breakdown of gorbachev's perestroika and the resulting collapse of the soviet union demonstrate the failure of the idea in this stirring book grounds has ably sketched the background against which the theology of revolution has emerged grounds puts it this way i have sought to let the critics of the establishment christian and secular alike present in their own words the case for revolutionary change i have also sought to let the revolutionary theologians set forth their interpretation of christianity in detail quite literally i have allowed them to speak for themselves i have sought further to let christian scholars who dissent from this new theology engage its proponents in debate very heavily i have drawn upon the work of jacques ellul the towering french sociologist who is rapidly gaining in the united states the attention and respect which his rare fusion of professional distinction intellectual power and biblical commitment deserves i shall feel amply regarded if through these pages he wins a wider readership among american evangelicals an additional purpose has been to confront my own ecclesiastical tradition that of protestant orthodoxy with the inexpressibly pressing need of permitting the anguish of our world to drive theological conservatism back to a new testament discipleship which is nothing less than revolutionary
