this book by architectural writer irénée scalbert bears witness to some of the more significant developments in architecture during the last 25 years the essays alternate between detailed studies of major buildings written while these were being designed or as they were being rediscovered after a period of oblivion and broader historical surveys that seek out the origin of contemporary architectural ideas more than their extent however what distinguishes these essays is that they draw from direct experience from interviews with architects clients engineers and users and from the pleasurable at times rapturous contemplation of architecture
