this study of the literary culture in britain in the years after waterloo begins with an account of two fatal duels the famous duel of 16 february 1821 in which john scott editor of the london magazine fell and the less well known duel of 26 march 1822 in which alexander boswell son of johnson s biographer was killed these duels richard cronin suggests bring into sharp focus the distinctive features of literary culture in the years after waterloo the book ranges widely but at its centre are the three literary phenomena that best define the period walter scott s novels byron s don juan and the new literary magazines it was a culture constituted not by the doctrine of sympathy that its leading writers held in common but by the antagonisms that divided them a culture in which england vied with scotland literary and political principles converged and there was a volatile relationship between the public and the private these were the years in which publishing became an industry serving a mass readership and literature came to be decisively identified with print rather than with manuscript its most prized cultural products were miscellaneous superficial even heartless responses to the world were valued male writers responded aggressively to the threat that literature might be a kind of writing largely consumed by women and increasingly produced by them this was the culture that writers such as wordsworth repudiated but the relationship between the culture that wordsworth represented and the culture that he opposed like the relationship between duellists was at once violently aggressive and mutually supportive each as many writers of the period recognized was dependent on the other making the right wing bharatiya janata party s nuclear tests in 1998 its starting point this book examines how opinion amongst india s attentive public shifted from supporting nuclear abstinence to accepting and even feeling a need for a more assertive policy by examining the complexities of the debate in india on nuclear policy in the 1990s the study seeks to account for the shift in opinion by looking at the parallel processes of how nuclear policy became an important part of the public discourse in india and what it came to symbolise for the country s intelligentsia during this decade it argues that the pressure on new delhi in the early 1990s to fall in line with the non proliferation regime magnified by india s declining global influence at the time caused the issue to cease being one of defence making it a focus of nationalist pride instead the country s nuclear programme thus emerged as a test of its ability to withstand external compulsions guaranteeing not so much the sanctity of its borders as a certain political idea of it that of a modern scientific and most importantly sovereign state able to defend its policies and set its goals from the foundations of the world s first great empires to the empires of today war has preoccupied human civilisation for as many as 4000 years it has fascinated horrified thrilled confused inspired and disgusted mankind since records began provoking such a huge range of emotions and reactions and fulfilling all the elements of newsworthiness it is hardly surprising that war makes good news modern technological advancements such as the camera and television brought the brutality of war into the homes and daily lives of the public no longer a far away and out of sight affair the public s ability to see what was happening on the frontline changed not only how wars were fought but why they were fought even when a war is considered popular the involvement of the press and the weight of public opinion has led to criticisms that have transformed modern warfare almost in equal measure to the changes brought about by weapon technology war reporting seeks to look beyond the official story to understand the very nature of conflict whilst acknowledging that it is no longer simply good versus evil this edited volume presents a unique insight into the work of the war correspondent and battlefield photographer from the earliest days of modern war reporting to the present it reveals how influenced by the changing face of modern warfare the work of the war correspondent has been significantly altered in style method and practice by combining historical analysis with experiences of modern day war reporting this book provides an important contribution to the understanding of this complicated profession which will be of interest to journalists academics and students alike
