The Co-operative News 1891 the last 2 3 years have seen an explosion in interest in the application of influence as a tool for achieving military objectives this is not new the military have always sought to exert influence albeit at times unwittingly however two significant events have brought the issue to further prominence the publication of jdp3 401 and the deployment of 52 brigade to helmand province in 2007 8 this article does not intend to debate either in any detail a quick search of inter and intra nets will provide plenty of information for the curious reader but there are two issues worthy of slightly more discussion the first concerns 52 brigade's deployment when brigadier andrew mackay led 52 brigade to helmand province he did so having examined previous kinetic based deployments and concluded that these for various reasons had not achieved the effects that he envisaged for his mission for him the consent of the population was utterly key and would not nor could it be achieved by hard power alone or even with hard power primacy as he developed his operational design he felt frustrated that existing doctrine did not adequately prepare him to operate within the influence arena the second is that andrew mackay subsequently became one of the driving forces behind jdp3 40 and in particular the forceful articulation of the centrality of influence however the how to do it guidance still lags behind the emphasis on and enthusiasm for its use the land warfare centre's recent classified publication the influence handbook is a very definite step in the right direction and yet in our view it still leaves questions unanswered it is all very well to state a requirement but when it is not matched by a detailed how it becomes not a challenge but a burden in behavioural conflict from general to strategic corporal mackay and tatham explained how 52 brigade looked outside of the military staff and education environments for at that time in neither was the how articulated mackay's search took in behavioural economics and group psychology and in doing so he found himself finding answers in books such as the age of the unthinkable nudge and predictably irrational none of which currently feature in the chief of defence staff's recommended reading list at the staff colleges whilst such research is commendable it was also arguably indicative of a failure of military education nor does it seem reasonable that commanders should have to be hunter gatherers of strategic thinking but should instead have resources readily on tap to assist them today the landscape is different and the influence handbook fills many of the gaps that once existed but not all this paper seeks to provide greater clarity in two key areas target audience analysis taa and measurements of effectiveness moe

The Old Guard 1869 today we will examine issues related to the chinese government s propaganda directed at foreign audiences its alleged efforts to exert influence over u s institutions and u s public opinion and its espionage and cyber espionage activities directed against the united states we re going to be talking about things that all governments do in one form or another governments seek to influence public opinion that of their own people and that of others governments apparently like to be loved as much as people like to be loved what we are trying to understand today is how the chinese do it what tactics they employ and to some extent what the results are
