the study of crime has focused primarily on why particular people commit crime or why specific communities have higher crime levels than others in the criminology of place david weisburd elizabeth groff and sue ming yang present a new and different way of looking at the crime problem by examining why specific streets in a city have specific crime trends over time based on a 16 year longitudinal study of crime in seattle washington the book focuses our attention on small units of geographic analysis micro communities defined as street segments half of all seattle crime each year occurs on just 5 6 percent of the city s street segments yet these crime hot spots are not concentrated in a single neighborhood and street by street variability is significant weisburd groff and yang set out to explain why the criminology of place shows how much essential information about crime is inevitably lost when we focus on larger units like neighborhoods or communities reorienting the study of crime by focusing on small units of geography the authors identify a large group of possible crime risk and protective factors for street segments and an array of interventions that could be implemented to address them the criminology of place is a groundbreaking book that radically alters traditional thinking about the crime problem and what we should do about it radically reimagine our ways of being learning and doing education can be transformed if we eradicate our fixation on big data like standardized test scores as the supreme measure of equity and learning instead of the focus being on fixing and filling academic gaps we must envision and rebuild the system from the student up with classrooms schools and systems built around students brilliance cultural wealth and intellectual potential street data reminds us that what is measurable is not the same as what is valuable and that data can be humanizing liberatory and healing by breaking down street data fundamentals what it is how to gather it and how it can complement other forms of data to guide a school or district s equity journey safir and dugan offer an actionable framework for school transformation written for educators and policymakers this book offers fresh ideas and innovative tools to apply immediately provides an asset based model to help educators look for what s right in our students and communities instead of seeking what s wrong explores a different application of data from its capacity to help us diagnose root causes of inequity to its potential to transform learning and its power to reshape adult culture now is the time to take an antiracist stance interrogate our assumptions about knowledge measurement and what really matters when it comes to educating young people toronto prides itself on being the world's most diverse city and its officials seek to support this diversity through programs and policies designed to promote social inclusion yet this progressive vision of law often falls short in practice limited by problems inherent in the political culture itself in everyday law on the street mariana valverde brings to light the often unexpected ways that the development and implementation of policies shape everyday urban life drawing on four years spent participating in council hearings and civic association meetings and shadowing housing inspectors and law enforcement officials as they went about their day to day work valverde reveals a telling transformation between law on the books and law on the streets she finds for example that some of the democratic governing mechanisms generally applauded public meetings for instance actually create disadvantages for marginalized groups whose members are less likely to attend or articulate their concerns as a result both officials and citizens fail to see problems outside the point of view of their own needs and neighborhood taking issue with jane jacob's and many others valverde ultimately argues that toronto and other diverse cities must reevaluate their allegiance to strictly local solutions if urban diversity is to be truly inclusive of tenants as well as homeowners and recent immigrants as well as longtime residents cities must move beyond micro local planning and embrace a more expansive citywide approach to planning and regulation explores encounters between those who make their living by engaging in street based prostitution and the criminal justice and social service workers who try to curtail it working together every day the lives of sex workers police officers public defenders and social service providers are profoundly intertwined yet their relationships are often adversarial and rooted in fundamentally false assumptions the criminal justice social services alliance operates on the general belief that the women they police and otherwise regulate choose sex work as a result of traumatization rather than acknowledging the fact that socioeconomic realities often inform their choices drawing on extraordinarily rich ethnographic research including interviews with over one hundred street involved women and dozens of criminal justice and social service professionals women of the street argues that despite the intimate knowledge these groups have about each other measures designed to help these women consistently fail because they do not take into account false assumptions about street life homelessness drug use and sex trading reaching beyond disciplinary silos by combining the analysis of an anthropologist and a legal scholar the book offers an evidence based argument for the decriminalization of prostitution
