the fugitive slave act or fugitive slave law was a law passed by the 31st united states congress on september 18 1850 as part of the compromise of 1850 between southern interests in slavery and northern free soilers the measure met with strong opposition in the northern states some of which enacted personal liberty laws to hamper the execution of the federal law these laws provided that fugitives who appealed an original decision against them were entitled to a jury trial by the time of the constitutional convention in 1787 many northern states including vermont new hampshire rhode island massachusetts and connecticut had abolished slavery northern states avoided enforcing the law and by 1860 the number of runaways successfully returned to slaveholders hovered around just 330
