some people make photo albums collect antiques or visit historic battlefields others keep diaries plan annual family gatherings or stitch together patchwork quilts in a tradition learned from grandparents each of us has ways of communing with the past and our reasons for doing so are as varied as our memories in a sweeping survey roy rosenzweig and david thelen asked 1 500 americans about their connection to the past and how it influences their daily lives and hopes for the future the result is a surprisingly candid series of conversations and reflections on how the past infuses the present with meaning rosenzweig and thelen found that people assemble their experiences into narratives that allow them to make sense of their personal histories set priorities project what might happen next and try to shape the future by using these narratives to mark change and create continuity people chart the courses of their lives a young woman from ohio speaks of giving birth to her first child which caused her to reflect upon her parents and the ways that their example would help her to become a good mother an african american man from georgia tells how he and his wife were drawn to each other by their shared experiences and lessons learned from growing up in the south in the 1950s others reveal how they personalize historical events as in the case of a massachusetts woman who traces much of her guarded attitude toward life to witnessing the assassination of john f kennedy on television when she was a child while the past is omnipresent to americans history as it is usually defined in textbooks leaves many people cold rosenzweig and thelen found that history as taught in school does not inspire a strong connection to the past and they reveal how race and ethnicity affects how americans perceive the past while most white americans tend to think of it as something personal african americans and american indians are more likely to think in terms of broadly shared experiences like slavery the civil rights movement and the violation of indian treaties rosenzweig and thelen s conclusions about the ways people use their personal family and national stories have profound implications for anyone involved in researching or presenting history as well as for all those who struggle to engage with the past in a meaningful way
